WHEN DOES A LITTLE "WHITE LIE" BECOME A BIG CHEAT?:

Hopefully, many of you read my long winded remarks about short-handed "cheats" and improperly placed all-star points. Unbelievably, I've heard from no less than 15 or so people on this. Surprisingly, almost all of them "knew" who the offending team was. More surprisingly, these 15 people managed to name 9 different teams who they've claimed have pulled a "cheat" or so.

Perhaps this suggests that there are several teams out there who may have taken extra advantage of the rules from time to time. This certainly needs addressing. The league directors would say that the rules are the rules, and if you are short handed, so be it.

That being said, I will once again remind you of Larry Rabin's rule, "if I didn't hear it, it didn't happen." I say this because I know there are still some out there who may allow another team to recycle players. All I am asking here is that if you do feel the need to bypass this rule, please do it with some semblance of fairness to the rest of your division. The unofficial "hat" rule means that you place all available players names in a hat, and pull a name each time there is a replacement needed. And lets face it, there are captains out there, who when are playing short, will try their best to repeat only their best players. You should NEVER let your opponent repeat the same player twice. (This is totally unfair to everyone and defeats the unofficial hat rule.) The hat rule insures that any possible replacement is selected randomly. Also, this hat rule business is supposed to be a once in a blue moon fix, and not meant for a team to notoriously play shorthanded.

As for all-star points, only points in legal games should count. As of right now there are thirty players on our All Star Teams. In all fairness to each of them, please do not allow your opponent to place illegally obtained all star points on the sheet.

Finally, as for my previous long winded rant on this subject, I was not accusing any team of anything. The entire set of remarks was based upon unsubstantiated rumor and innuendo. The rant, if anything, was designed to get everyone thinking about the absolute unfairness should any of us allow such a series of events to unfold.

PLAY-OFF'S: Week 15 is in the books. Gold position 4 is yet to be decided as there is one postponed game still open. The Iron division has two unplayed games and remains totally open. These games must be called in by 10 am this Friday, June 25th. (see page 2). The bracket is posted on page 3 and will be updated again on Friday the 25th. I will be at the Vegas tournament for the week and the stats will be completely updated when I return (on the following Friday)

Comments? Suggestions? Remember, my friends, this is your league!! Anyone can make a contribution. Email GCDarts@aol.com and be heard!

Good Darts, and God Bless America,
Lou and Billy
